LuLu and the Cowtippers

are featured today at 4 p.m. as St. Benedict's concludes the Sunday Sessions series of music and spiritual connection. LuLu and the Cowtippers is a powerful Rock & Roll quartet currently working on the band's second album, "Elsewhere." The local band has performed for 10 years and all members come from successful bands that have been opening acts for well-known artists such as Chris Isaak, Eddie Money, X and Cashed Out. Please join us!

Opportunity of a lifetime! Spend the day with Presiding Bishop Michael Curry. Bishop Michael is a man of deep spirituality and an entertaining and engaging speaker in the tradition of black preachers. You will want to be there. Salinas, January 7th 10am.

Hineni

Several of you have asked me about the Leonard Cohen song with which I started my sermon last Sunday. If you missed the sermon, you'll find it on our website, www.stbenslososos.org.

I see it as a prayer to a false god. The God of Cohen's poem wants the world darker - he wants people to be broken and lame in order for him to be the great healer - he wants people to feel shame so that he can be glorified. His glory results in human pain.

This is, of course, a complete misreading of scripture. Yet we see this dark god portrayed in the Bible in a number of ways - for example, the idea that God ordered the Israelites to massacre their enemies.

We have a tendency to make God in human image rather than allowing ourselves to be remade in God's image. And the God we make is often fearful and demanding, like the god in this poem.

I imagine that the religious leaders who demanded Jesus' death believed that they were doing God's will. In Cohen's words, they thought that God wants it darker, and so they killed the flame. I know that many people who voted for an apparently racist and misogynistic president believed they were doing God's will.

The hope comes with the word Hineni which is Hebrew for "I'm here" or "I'm ready". Although it might mean that the singer is ready to make it darker, because this is what Abraham said when God prevented him from sacrificing his son Isaac, I see it as a hopeful and even defiant cry to the true God, the God of light.

In my view, "You want it darker" is a lament about the darkness of the world and the way it perceives God as wanting us to hate and exclude. But the true God is waiting for us to respond, Hineni, I am ready - use me.

And then, as Cohen says in Anthem which I played at the end, we can...

"You Want It Darker"

If you are the dealer, I'm out of the game
If you are the healer, it means I'm broken and lame
If thine is the glory then mine must be the shame
You want it darker: We kill the flame

Magnified, sanctified, be thy holy name
Vilified, crucified, in the human frame
A million candles burning for the help
that never came
You want it darker

Hineni, hineni, I'm ready, my lord

There's a lover in the story
But the story's still the same
There's a lullaby for suffering
And a paradox to blame
But it's written in the scriptures
And it's not some idle claim
You want it darker
We kill the flame

They're lining up the prisoners
And the guards are taking aim
I struggled with some demons
They were middle class and tame
I didn't know I had permission to murder and to maim
You want it darker

Hineni, hineni I'm ready, my lord

Magnified, sanctified, be thy holy name
Vilified, crucified, in the human frame
A million candles burning for the love
that never came
You want it darker; We kill the flame

If you are the dealer, let me out of the game
If you are the healer, I'm broken and lame
If thine is the glory, mine must be the shame
You want it darker

Hineni, hineni

Hineni, hineni

I'm ready, my lord

Hineni Hineni, Hineni, Hineni

*Ring the bells that still can ring
Forget your perfect offering
There is a crack in everything
That's how the light gets in.*
